Loughran is accused of driving a car to New York City on Feb. 7, 2014, to carry out a threat to attack Obama and the news media. Officials say Loughran allegedly told the driver he intends to "kill more than one thing and kill a lot of people." Authorities say the man also took photos of the vehicle on his cell phone, and that the car was located at a gas station, then taken to an airfield across the country, where officials tracked the vehicle and detained the man, along with a weapon.. "I'm very surprised to hear today," said attorney Robert McQuade, Jr., who represents Loughran in federal court. "At one point, we were hearing that the feds arrested a person, and he's been charged. Well, I'm surprised that they would not just arrest him."

The New York Police Department says Loughran was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon, a felony punishable by up to six years in prison. He was booked last week at the Metropolitan Detention Center in Brooklyn for violating his parole or a condition of his probation. His attorney also is in his second week of representing Loughran in federal court. Loughran's attorney did not return phone calls yesterday..
